

120228-N-OX321-261 IWO TO, Japan (Feb. 28, 2012) – Sailors from Naval Air Facility (NAF) Atsugi raise the American flag in preparation for a mass re-enlistment ceremony held on top of Mount Suribachi at Iwo To, Japan. Iwo To, formally known as Iwo Jima, where the iconic photograph of the Marines raising the flag was taken on Mount Suribachi. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist Seaman Kegan E. Kay/Released)

120228-N-OX321-566 IWO TO, Japan (Feb. 28, 2012) – Sailors from Naval Air Facility (NAF) Atsugi recite the oath during their mass re-enlistment ceremony held on top of Mount Suribachi at Iwo To, Japan. Iwo To, formally known as Iwo Jima, where the iconic photograph of the Marines raising the flag was taken on Mount Suribachi. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist Seaman Kegan E. Kay/Released)

120228-N-OX321-607 IWO TO, Japan (Feb. 28, 2012) – Lt. j.g. Frederick Wood, Naval Air Facility (NAF) Atsugi's Naval Security Force security officer, leaves behind a NAF Atsugi security badge as part of the mass re-enlistment ceremony held on top of Mount Suribachi at Iwo To, Japan. Mementos are often left by visitors to the island to honor those who's lives were lost. Iwo To, formally known as Iwo Jima, where the iconic photograph of the Marines raising the flag was taken on Mount Suribachi. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist Seaman Kegan E.

Kay/Released)

120228-N-OX321-759 IWO TO, Japan (Feb. 28, 2012) – Sailors from Naval Air Facility (NAF) Atsugi pose for a group shot after a mass re-enlistment ceremony held on top of Mount Suribachi at Iwo To, Japan. Iwo To, formally known as Iwo Jima, where the iconic photograph of the Marines raising the flag was taken on Mount Suribachi. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist Seaman Kegan E. Kay/Released)