Sewells Point Golf Course, designed by Donald Ross based on the Muirfield Links in Scotland, opened in 1927. The mid-20th century brought some of the big names in golf to Sewells Point where Arnold Palmer made his professional debut at an exhibition co-sponsored by the Norfolk Sports Club. After the start of World War II, Sam Snead, having won the 1942 PGA tournament, reported for duty at Naval Station Norfolk where he gave lessons to officers at Sewells Point. Today deemed an historical site, Sewells Point is considered a favorite for both officers and enlisted alike.
