Honoring the legacy of ‘Dorie’ Miller

(EDITOR’S NOTE: The housing area at Doris Miller Park community at Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam was named in honor of Doris ‘Dorie’ Miller.)

By CNRHP Public Affairs

In honor of African-American/Black History Month, we honor the legacy of Mess Attendant 3rd Class Doris “Dorie” Miller, a shipboard cook who rose to hero status during the attack on Pearl Harbor in Dec. 7, 1941. He was the first African-American to be awarded the Navy Cross for his bravery.

Born in Waco, Texas in October 1919, Miller worked on his father’s farm before enlisting in the U.S. Navy as a mess attendant in September 1939 with a desire to travel and provide support for his family.

Prior to and even during World War II, mess attendants were relegated to laundry detail, cooking meals, swabbing the deck and shining officers’ shoes.

While the support functions the mess attendants provided then—and by extension the things our culinary specialists do today—have mission impacts, “mess-men” were not allowed to be direct warfighters. In a fight, they carried ammunition and they carried the wounded to medical care. They also carried the weight of discrimination and segregation—separate and unequal.

However, the pressures of wartime on manpower resources, the heroic examples of Miller and the willingness of thousands of patriotic men to participate in the war effort gradually forced changes.

So what did Miller do?

It was Jan. 2, 1940 when Miller was stationed at Pearl Harbor aboard the USS West Virginia (BB-48). After a month of temporary duty aboard USS Nevada (BB-36) on July of that year at Second Battery Gunnery School, he returned to the West Virginia on August and served on that battleship until that fateful day.

On the morning of the attack on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941, the alarm for general quarters sounded as Miller was doing laundry below deck. Immediately, Miller headed for his battle station, the anti-aircraft battery magazine amidship, only to discover that torpedo damage had wrecked it, according to Naval History and Heritage Command.

With his physical strength, he went on deck and carried his fellow wounded Sailors to safety. Among those he attended to was the ship’s commander, Capt. Mervyn S. Bennion, who was mortally wounded.

Despite any formal training, Miller then took control of a .50-caliber anti-aircraft machine gun until he ran out of ammunition and was ordered to abandon ship.

Because of Miller’s actions, he was commended by the Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox on April 1, 1942.

He was later presented with the Navy Cross by Adm. Chester W. Nimitz aboard USS Enterprise (CV-6) at Pearl Harbor on May 27, 1942 for his bravery and heroism aboard the USS West Virginia (BB-48) during the attack on Pearl Harbor in World War II.

Miller was an inspiration for all U.S. Navy Sailors and all Americans. Today, his legacy lives on at the Doris Miller Park housing at Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam. A bronze commemorative plaque dedicated by the Alpha Kappa Sorority on Oct. 11, 1991 is located at the housing community in his honor.

15th Medical Group, J BPHH opens lactation room for breastfeeding moms

By 15th Medical Group staff

Mothers at Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam now have a new location to privately and comfortably breastfeed or pump. The 15th Medical Group recently held a ribbon-cutting ceremony Feb. 1 to commemorate the opening of the new lactation room.

The room opened in October, and the response has been very positive.

"I think it’s wonderful that there is a lactation room," said Senior Airman Sarah Phillips, 15th Medical Operations Squadron women’s health technician. "I know that in a lot of work centers, women don’t have access to a dedicated space to pump. I feel lucky that this room is available for me so I can pump in a comfortable, private space and then get back to work."

According to the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP), breastfeeding is the best way to provide a child with the nutrients they need, while decreasing both long and short-term health risks for mother and baby. The AAP recommends that infants be breastfed exclusively for the first six months and then continue to be breastfed, along with introducing complimentary foods, until they are one year or older.

The lactation room is located at the 15th Medical Group in A wing, room A109 next to the pharmacy. It is open Monday-Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and is closed on training days or official holidays. There is a massage chair, a TV, as well as a small refrigerator available to store labeled milk until the end of the day.

"Opening the lactation room in the 15th Medical Group is a small way to demonstrate our commitment to moms and families here on JBPHTH," said Col. Kara Gormont, 15th Medical Group commander.

Air and ground force elements came together across the Hawaiian Islands last week to jointly participate in close air support (CAS) training with U.S. Air Force B-52H Stratofortress bombers from Andersen Air Force Base, Guam.

Conducted in Feb. 11 and 13, the training involved U.S. Air Force joint terminal air controllers, the bombers and A-10 Thunderbolt IIs, along with U.S. Marine Corps AH-1Z helicopters and U.S. Army forward observers operating on Oahu and Hawaii’s Pohakuloa Training Area.

In addition to strengthening the skills of the Airmen, Marines and Soldiers in the field and sky, the missions tested Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam’s 613th Air Operations Center’s (AOC) ability to command and control joint forces over a large geographic distance.

“These are dynamic missions with multiple, unique moving parts,” said Col. Jason Rueschhoff, 613th AOC commander. “It is a testament to the professionalism and skill of our joint AOC warriors that they orchestrate all of these forces together from an initial planning cell to the operations floor for execution. This training enabled U.S. Air Force and Joint Forces a realistic, multi-domain approach to tackle complex and emerging challenges.”

The bombers flew to the Hawaiian Islands from Guam as part of U.S. Indo-Pacific Command’s Continuous Bomber Presence initiative. In addition to increasing the capabilities of the aircrew, these sorties demonstrate U.S. Indo-Pacific Command’s ability to mitigate the geographical challenges of distance unique to the Indo-Pacific region.

“The integration of the B-52 into this exercise creates training opportunities for everyone involved,” said Maj. Christopher “DASH” Curtis, 23rd Expeditionary Bomb Squadron (EBS) liaison officer. “The B-52 brings unique capabilities to the CAS fight. Flying a long duration sortie across the Pacific to deliver weapons in a CAS scenario highlights just one of those capabilities.

This exercise provides an effective training environment for the Bomber Barons but maybe more importantly it demonstrates the unique capability of the B-52 to deliver effects anywhere at any time.”

The 23rd EBS is currently deployed from Minot Air Force Base, N.D., in support of U.S. Indo-Pacific Command’s Continuous Bomber Presence operations, which have been ongoing since March 2004. This recent mission is consistent with international law and United States’ long-standing commitment to a free and open Indo-Pacific.
Air Defense Mission breaks ground on new facility

Team Hickam ushered in a new era of air defense during a groundbreaking ceremony for the new F-22 Aerospace Control Alert (ACA) Facility, Feb. 14 at Joint Base Pearl-Harbor Hickam.

Representatives from Pacific Air Forces, 154th Wing and 15th Wing, Air Force Civil Engineer Center, and the United States Army Corps of Engineers gathered for a traditional Hawaiian blessing performed by Kahu Kelekona Bishaw. Included were seven groundbreaking o’o sticks used in traditional Hawaiian ceremonies.

“The milo wood bowl and the o’o sticks keeps us connected to the aina (land),” said Bishaw, “In old Hawaii, o’o stick was the multi-purpose tool for farmers. It was used to dig, harvest and to protect.”

The current building was built in 1958 and it will be torn down once the new facility comes online. The new facility will continue to support the ACA mission which is carried out by pilots, maintainers, and weapons crews. They are on call 24/7, ready to respond at a moments notice against air threats to the Hawaiian Islands.

“The new alert shack has been a long time coming,” said Brig. Gen. Gregory S. Woodrow, Commander, 154th Wing. “The old alert shack hasn’t been updated much from 1958. We owe it to our service members to build something worthy for the mission Team Hickam is going to perform.”

Team Hickam consists of Hawaii Air National Guardsmen and active-duty service members. This unit is one of several ACA sites around the country, which provides a national network of combat aircraft capable of activating at any time under any weather condition in response to airborne threats to national airspace.

Essex ARG Visits Hawaii

The Wasp-class amphibious assault ship USS Essex (LHD 2), other ships of the Essex Amphibious Ready Group (ARG), and embarked 13th Marine Expeditionary Unit (MEU) visited Pearl Harbor Feb. 18-20.

“Pearl Harbor is rich in military history and its strategic location places it center stage in the Pacific,” said Capt. Gerald Olin, commander, Amphibious Squadron One. “The harbors and bases the Navy uses here are among the very best in the world and help ensure that naval forces in the Pacific are trained and ready to respond to any contingency. We are glad to have an opportunity to visit this wonderful port and help strengthen the Navy’s iron-clad relationship with Hawaii.”

Upon arrival to Pearl Harbor, the crew manned the rails and rendered honors to the fallen when passing the USS Arizona Memorial.

“It’s important not to lose sight of our history,” said Essex Command Master Chief Matthew Danforth. “It’s a somber reminder of the cost of freedom. Even now, we give our thanks to those who join us in our fight to keep our families, friends and countrymen safe.”

While in Hawaii, Sailors and Marines had a chance to enjoy and explore the island of Oahu. Additionally, the ships brought aboard friends and family members, known as “tigers.” During the Tiger Cruise, Sailors and Marines will have the chance to show their “tigers” what life aboard a Navy ship is like.

“I’m personally very excited at the opportunity to show our family and friends what life at sea is all about,” said Capt. Brian Mutty, Essex’s commanding officer. “It’s a great opportunity to showcase our incredible Sailors and the crucial missions they execute.”

During their deployment the Navy, Marine Corps team participated in amphibious exercises with partner nations in the 6th, 7th and 5th Fleets’ areas of operation. Additionally, this deployment marked the first time the F-35B, Lightning II conducted combat operations in the Central Command area of responsibility.

“We set out to strengthen partnerships with our allies and demonstrate our combat capabilities,” said Olin. “The Sailors and Marines of the ARG worked hard as a team to make this successful.”

The Essex ARG includes the Essex, San Antonio-class amphibious transport dock ship USS Anchorage (LPD 23) and Whidbey Island-class amphibious dock landing ship USS Rushmore (LSD 47). The 13th MEU, Amphibious Squadron (PHIBRON) 1 and the “Blackjacks” of Helicopter Sea Combat Squadron (HSC) 21 are also embarked aboard the ships.
Commander Submarine Force, U.S. Pacific Fleet held a change of command ceremony at the historic submarine piers on Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam, Feb. 21.

Caudle assumed command in September 2017 and oversaw 60 percent of the entire U.S. Navy Submarine Force. This included oversight of the nation’s ballistic missile submarine fleet operating in the Pacific on behalf of U.S. Strategic Command Commander Air Force General John E. Hyten.

“We are blessed with extraordinary levels of talent across our Force,” said Caudle. “With such a large talent pool in our Navy, it makes it all the more impressive that our nation’s submariners are truly the best of the best.”

During his tour, Caudle guided the Pacific Submarine Force through 19 attack and guided missile submarine deployments and 26 strategic deterrent patrols in support of combatant commands.

Caudle praised the submarine force and lauded their ability to accomplish their complex mission.

“To execute a strategy with so many challenging goals, supporting objectives, and end states that span across so many areas of responsibility, it takes countless talented and dedicated people who are committed to excellence,” said Caudle. “When a commander is supported by so many talented individuals, it’s impossible within a short period of time to say thank you to each of them with sufficient meaning and gratitude.”

Adm. John C. Aquilino commander, U.S. Pacific Fleet was the guest speaker of the ceremony.

“Sound leadership is easy to talk about but it is quite another thing to execute, and for the past year and a half Daryl [Caudle] has been dedicated to the men and women who serve with him,” said Aquilino.

Aquilino also commended Caudle for his successful tour leading the Pacific Submarine Force and increasing its combat readiness resulting in Caudle receiving a Legion of Merit medal for his exceptionally meritorious service.

Caudle is slated to assume duties as the vice director for Strategy, Plans and Policy, at the Joint Staff in Washington D.C.

As Converse assumed command, he thanked Caudle for a smooth turnover and for leaving him with an experienced staff ready to take on new undersea challenges.

“Over the past two decades we’ve pivoted our Navy’s forces to the Pacific, and now we’re forging a Navy that is laser-focused on the great power competition on the high seas,” said Converse. “This is going to require a clear, shared vision of how we will fight today in the undersea domain, and what that fight will look like in the next 10 years.”

The Pacific submarine force provides anti-submarine warfare, anti-surface ship warfare, precision land strike, intelligence, surveillance, reconnaissance and early warning and special warfare capabilities to U.S. Pacific Command and strategic deterrence capabilities to U.S. Strategic Command.

Top performers recognized at 2018 Launa’ole Awards

The Hawaii Air National Guard’s top-performing Airmen and units were cheered on by a roaring audience on Feb. 10, during the 2018 Launa’ole Award ceremony at Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam.

Dignitaries, family members and friends packed into the Hickam Officers’ Club to show support for the nominees and congratulate the winners for their exceptional achievements over the past year.

During the opening remarks, Brig. Gen. Gregory S. Woodrow, 154th Wing commander, shared his appreciation for the accomplishments of the nominees and the wing-at-large. He also introduced the audience to the perpetual Kaleo Nui Award, which is presented to the unit which demonstrates the most spirit at the event. Kaleo Nui means “the loud voice.”

While the ceremony has been held annually for the past 43 years, it was officially renamed to Launa’ole in 2001, meaning “beyond comparison” or “without peer.”

Prior to the announcements of the award winners, Hawaii State Governor David Ige stepped onto stage to express his gratitude as their commander and chief.

“I cannot tell you how proud you all make me feel every single day,” said Ige, “for all that you have done for our state and our country. This is one of the best events that I get to attend and I am really honored and privileged just to be here.”

The awards were presented to the following:

Airman of the year:
- Fulltime – Senior Airman Reid Suzuki, 154th Comptroller Flight
- Traditional – Airman 1st Class Noel Tadeo, 169th Air Defense Squadron

NCO of the year:

A Run to Honor

On a quest to honor her deceased son's memory as well as other military members killed while serving their country, Gold Star mom Cathy Powers stopped by Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam (JBPHH) on Feb. 20 to run and to present a remembrance wreath as she continues her personal journey of healing.

A group of military members and families joined Powers at the Missing Man Memorial on Wednesday morning to participate in a small portion of her run here in Hawaii and to witness her present a live fir wreath at JBPHH.

Powers is not only trying to inspire others with her journey but also to serve as an ambassador for “Wreaths Across America” as she runs miles to raise funds for wreath donations at Arlington National Cemetery. Her goal is to run 1,000 miles across all 50 states as well as to raise money to donate 7,777 veteran’s wreaths. Powers says that 7,777 isn’t just a meaningless number. She says it represents the exact number of days her son was alive.

In 2013, Powers’ son Senior Airman Bryce Powers was injured while on deployment in Japan. He was medivaced to Tripler Army Hospital and despite treatment he died.

After her son’s death, Powers struggled with despair and grief. She sought comfort in food and eventually found herself at almost 300 pounds. After seeking advice from a doctor who told her she was the solution to her weight struggles, Powers decided to make a change.

She began exercising and walking at first and then eventually participating in races and half marathons. She said she “just kept running,” and eventually she ran all the way down to 140 pounds.

JBPHH is the second stop on her yearlong run for wreaths. When asked what inspired her to make the base her second stop on her journey she said “because this place was extremely instrumental and helpful to me when our son was in a coma and had brain surgery locally at Tripler. Many here helped me and continued to follow our journey even after we left.”

To learn more about Powers’ goal, visit www.wreathsacrossamerica.org/VA0627
