			1 Take the pledge to Prevent Child Abuse @ www.taketheCAPMpledge.org	2. Have a discussion with other parents about effective non-corporal child discipline methods.	3 Learn more about the risk factors attributed to child abuse and neglect incidents.	4 Take a few minutes at the end of each day to connect with your children with a hug, a smile, a song or a few minutes of listening and talking.
5 Acknowledge your kid's good behavior.	6 Really listen to a child and understand that children need undivided attention when they talk. Be patient and remember that they move at a different pace in their little worlds.	7 Role-play how to express emotions with your kids - what do you do when you are happy sad or frustrated.	8 Create a parenting tips journal to use when dealing with a challenging issue.	9 Listen to parents when they tell you about their challenges.	10 Have a family "American Idol" night.	11 Arrange a parent against the kid's kickball or soccer game.
12 Encourage other parents to support each other through phone trees, carpools, or playgroups.	13 Tell your spouse or partner about their positive impact on the kid's life.	14 Talk to your kids about the importance of communicating to his/her parents.	15 Let your kids read you a story.	16 Tell your kids that you love them and explain why.	17 Have a board game family night	18 Create or update an emergency phone tree.
19 Create a game that would allow you to teach your kids about good character.	20 Participate in a free child development class in your community.	21 Teach your kids how to resolve conflicts peacefully.	22 Practice a new non-physical method to discipline your kids.	23 Make a list of agencies you can go to for help during a crisis.	24 Arrange a play date for your kids.	25 Host a potluck with other parents.
26 Create a parent and kids arts and crafts activity.	27 Create different ways to make your home warm and inviting for your kids.	28 Use an art program to help kids express themselves without words.	29 Share your feelings with someone you trust.	30 Surround yourself with people who support you and make you feel good about yourself.
