

120324-N-RQ315-043 AYASE, Japan (Mar. 24, 2012) – An EA-18G Growler from Electronic Attack Squadron 141 lands at Naval Air Facility Atsugi, Japan arriving at their new home as part of Carrier Air Wing Five (CVW 5). The new addition of the EA-18G Growler to the CVW 5 team brings increased capability and security to the Asia-Pacific region. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist 1st Class Charles Panter/Released)

120324-N-RQ315-211 AYASE, Japan (Mar. 24, 2012) – Various media representatives and family members wait at Naval Air Facility Atsugi's flight line for the arrival of Electronic Attack Squadron 141 to their new home with Carrier Air Wing Five (CVW 5). The new addition of the EA-18G Growler to the CVW 5 team brings increased capability and security to the Asia-Pacific region. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist 1st Class Charles Panter/Released)

120324-N-RQ315-463 AYASE, Japan (Mar. 24, 2012) – An EA-18G Growler from Electronic Attack Squadron 141 sits on Naval Air Facility Atsugi's flight line after the squadron's arrival at it's new home with Carrier Air Wing Five (CVW 5). The new addition of the EA-18G Growler to the CVW 5 team brings increased capability and security to the Asia-Pacific region. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist 1st Class Charles Panter/Released)

120324-N-RQ315-479 AYASE, Japan (Mar. 24, 2012) – Cmdr. Mike Miller, commanding officer of Electronic Attack Squadron 141, answers questions from various media representatives about the EA-18G Growler after the squadron's arrival at Naval Air Facility Atsugi. The new addition of the EA-18G Growler to the Carrier Air Wing Five team brings increased capability and security to the Asia-Pacific region. (U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist 1st Class Charles Panter/Released)