"Prevent Cooking Fires - Watch What You Heat" is the theme for this year's Fire Prevention Week which continues through Saturday. The Federal Fire Department (FFD) will be at the Navy Exchange at Pearl Harbor from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. today to conduct demonstrations and a series of displays about fire safety.

Sparky the Fire Dog and Freddy the Robot Fire Truck will be on hand to meet the keiki who will be able to have their photos taken with the fire safety characters. Other activities will include a House of Hazards and displays of fire-fighting equipment and fire trucks.

FFD firefighters will also be at Pearl Harbor Elementary School from 10:15-10:45 a.m. Oct. 27 for a fire safety awareness program. Highlights of the event will be a live fire demonstration with fire truck and ambulance, a live fire prevention show, and Sparky the Fire Dog.

The Federal Fire Department wants to increase the public's awareness of the dangers of smoke and fire. "The best way to fight a fire is to prevent a fire," emphasized Federal Fire Department Fire Chief Glenn Delaura.

In the United States, there is a house fire every 79 seconds. The number one cause of house fires is cooking. Unattended cooking is the leading cause of home cooking fires. Two out of three home cooking fires started on the stove.

Statistics show that the Federal Fire Department, Hawai'i has responded to 92 working fires so far in 2006. A number of them were structure fires that were caused by unattended cooking. Those are fires that could have been prevented.

The department is asking for the public's help to reduce the number of cooking fires through its fire prevention and public awareness programs.

For more information about Fire Prevention Week, call Victor M. Flint at the Federal Fire Department's prevention division, 474-7785.

Home Fire Prevention Tips

- Every Home Should Have at Least One Working Smoke Alarm - Buy a smoke alarm at any hardware or discount store. It's inexpensive protection for you and your family. Install a smoke alarm on every level of your home. A working smoke alarm can double your chances of survival. Test it monthly, keep it free of dust and replace the battery at least once a year. Smoke alarms themselves should be replaced after ten years of service, or as recommended by the manufacturer.

- Prevent Electrical Fires - Never overload circuits or extension cords. Do not place cords and wires under rugs, over nails or in high traffic areas. Immediately shut off and unplug appliances that sputter, spark or emit an unusual smell. Have them professionally repaired or replaced.

- Use Appliances Wisely - When using appliances follow the manufacturer's safety precautions. Overheating, unusual smells, shorts and sparks are all warning signs that appliances need to be shut off, then replaced or repaired. Unplug appliances when not in use. Use safety caps to cover all unused outlets, especially if there are small children in the home.

- Alternate Heaters - Portable heaters need their space.

Keep anything combustible at least three feet away. Keep fire in the fireplace. Use fire screens and have your chimney cleaned annually. The creosote buildup can ignite a chimney fire that could easily spread. Kerosene heaters should be used only where approved by authorities. Never use gasoline or camp-stove fuel. Refuel outside and only after the heater has cooled.

- Affordable Home Fire Safety Sprinklers - When home fire sprinklers are used with working smoke alarms, your chances of surviving a fire are greatly increased. Sprinklers are affordable - they can increase property value and lower insurance rates.

- Plan Your Escape - Practice an escape plan from every room in the house. Caution everyone to stay low to the floor when escaping from fire and never to open doors that are hot. Select a location where everyone can meet after escaping the house. Get out then call for help.

- Caring for Children - Children under five are naturally curious about fire. Many play with matches and lighters. Tragically, children set more than 20,000 house fires every year. Take the mystery out of fire play by teaching your children that fire is a tool, not a toy.

- Caring for Older People - Every year more than 1,200 senior citizens die in fires. Many of these fire deaths could have been prevented. Seniors are especially vulnerable because many live alone and can't respond quickly.

Friday the 13th...may be your lucky day

Karen S. Spangler

Editor

Today is Friday the 13th and if you suffer from paraskevidekatriaphobia, then today is probably not your favorite day. It's a big word, but simply means a fear of Friday the 13th.

The number 13 is itself considered bad luck. Building architects avoid numbering the 13th floor. Airlines avoid the 13th aisle in airplanes. And in the most common superstition regarding the number 13, Friday the 13th is considered a bad luck day.

Some people won't go to work on Friday the 13th, some won't eat dinner out on Friday the 13th, and there are many who wouldn't dream of setting an important date – such as a wedding date – on the supposedly ill-fated day. There are even some people who refuse to get out of bed on Friday the 13th.

Perhaps your apprehension of Friday the 13th isn't quite as drastic, but, just in case there's something to it, you aren't going to tempt fate. You're not alone – statisticians say that 21 million Americans, or an estimated eight percent, are in the grips of the old superstition.

A superstition is a belief, half-belief, or practice for which there appears to be no rational substance. According to some psychologists, "superstition provides us with an excuse for explaining away our mistakes and disgraces. In other words, it's an easy way to rationalize the screw-ups for which we ourselves are ultimately responsible." So if you get fired from your job today, or smash up your car, you might blame it on Friday the 13th.

Another opinion offered by psychologists is that people have been told it will be a bad day, so they selectively remember all the bad events that occur throughout the day.

There are numerous theories about how the Friday the 13th superstition began and they are based on a variety of theological and cultural events. Throughout generations of history, "bad" things have been known to happen on Fridays. The number 13 also plays a relevant role as a harbinger of bad omens.

One theory about the origin of the Friday the 13th superstition stems from Friday, Oct. 13, 1307. On this date, the pope of the church in Rome, in conjunction with the King of France, carried out a secret death warrant against "the Knights Templar." The Templars were terminated as heretics, never again to hold the power that they had held for so long. Their grand master, Jacques DeMolay, was arrested and before he was killed, was tortured and crucified.

Another story in which the tradition may have its roots is a Norse legend that tells about 12 gods who were invited to a banquet at Valhalla. Loki, the Evil One, god of mischief, had been excluded from the guest list, but crashed the party anyway, bringing the total number of attendees to 13. Loki incited Hod, the blind god of winter, to attack Balder the Good, who was a favorite of the gods. Hod took a spear of mistletoe offered by Loki and obediently hurled it at Balder, killing him instantly. All Valhalla grieved. Although the moral of this story might be, "Beware of uninvited guests bearing mistletoe," the Norse themselves apparently concluded that 13 people at a dinner party is just plain bad luck.

The fear of Friday the 13th stems from two separate fears - the fear of the number 13 and the fear of Fridays. Both fears have deep roots in Western culture, especially in Christian theology.

Some say Friday's bad luck reputation goes back to the Garden of Eden. It was on a Friday, supposedly, that Eve tempted Adam with the forbidden fruit. According to tradition, the Great Flood began on a Friday; God tongue-tied the builders of the Tower of Babel on a Friday; the Temple of Solomon was destroyed on a Friday; and Friday was the day of the week on which Christ was crucified.

There are numerous other notions about why Friday the 13th gets a bad rap. But the bottom line – no one really knows where the superstition had its beginnings.

British government made an effort – 100 years ago - to dispel widespread superstition among seamen that setting sail on Fridays was unlucky. A special ship was commissioned and named "H.M.S. Friday." They laid her keel on a Friday, launched her on a Friday, selected her crew on a Friday and hired a man named Jim Friday to be her captain. To top it off, H.M.S. Friday embarked on her maiden voyage on a Friday. Their efforts to quell the superstition backfired or maybe they tempted the fates just a bit too much...the ship was never seen or heard from again. Coincidence?

In more recent times, the flight of Apollo 13 in 1970 gave the date some added notoriety. Not only did the spacecraft bear the unlucky number, it started its ill-fated mission on a Friday the 13th, and almost all of the dates, names and times allegedly contained 13 or added up to 13 in some way.

Spilling salt, breaking a mirror, walking under a ladder, opening an umbrella inside the house, stepping on a crack, crossing the path of a black cat, Friday the 13th – are they really signs of bad luck or just superstitions?

If you are one of those who is really concerned about Friday the 13th, this is the only Friday the 13th day left to worry about this year. It doesn't happen again until April 2007.

On the other hand, Friday the 13th is considered the unluckiest of days unless you're born on this day. If you were born on this day, Friday the 13th is supposed to be your lucky day.

For whatever reason, even though Friday the 13th is usually my lucky day, I guess it wouldn't hurt to carry a four-leaf clover and a lucky penny, wish upon a star and keep my fingers crossed...just for good luck.

Here's wishing you a lucky day on Friday the 13th and have a fine Navy day here in paradise. We welcome comments from readers. If you have comments, please send them to: Karen.spangler@navy.mil.
